Spreading the Game

People frequently ask me, "How can I teach my friends/kids/grandkids bridge?" The lack of catchy, easy to use teaching methods is a serious threat to our game, which is why I was thrilled to find a free video series by Elena Grewal which is a great primer for new players. It may not be technically perfect, but it should do a great job getting Watch the videos and read my thoughts on teaching in this article.

Bridge Bulletin Reviews Larry's Newest DVD's

When "Larry Cohen Teaches Bridge" series was introduced in late 2017, only four videos were available. The series has since been expanded to 10 videos. The concept remains the same: Larry Cohen comes to your home via your TV or computer and gives you a personal seminar. Each of the 10 topics is addressed thoroughly in a clear, engaging way. There are three videos dealing with bidding (2/1 game force, takeout doubles, slam bidding), two on declarer play (notrump, draw or not draw trump) and five on defense (third-hand play, opening leads, second-hand play, signaling, defensive planning). The last video in particular, which deals with what to do when you find yourself on lead after a few tricks have been played, is exceptional. Cohen uses numerous examples to establish a clear understanding of what it means to make a safe play or why certain leads are risky -- before moving on to why you would want to make one versus the other. Viewers who watch this video and the rest of the series are certain to emerge better defenders. Any one of the videos by itself is worthwhile, but a discount is available if you get all of them as a bundle. -Chip Dombrowski, The ACBL Bridge Bulletin
